COLLEGE SESSION WILL OPEN TO-DAY

Bright Prospects for Large Attendance at Washington and Lee.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Lexington, Va., September 11.—The 121st session of Washington and Lee University will begin on Thursday of this week, and students, both old and new, are coming in rapidly. The freshmen have not only the administrative staff of the university, but an information bureau and the Young Men's Christian Association workers to help them get conveniently located.

The students returning from their summer vacation will find that a great many changes have taken place at the university, the most notable of which is the change in the head of the university, Dr. Henry Louis Smith having entered upon his duties as president on July 1. On the same day N. D. Smith, formerly professor of English, was named as registrar. Dr. Thomas J. Farrar, also registrar, Dr. Farrar will now give all of his time to his chair in German.

The only change made in the teaching staff of the university is an additional professorship in the law school, which has been taken by Dr. Bradford professorship of constitutional and international law, which was provided for by the board of trustees at its meeting last June. Robert W. Withers, of Bedford City, an alumnus of Washington and Lee and a graduate of the law school, has been elected to fill this chair.

An addition to the Geological laboratory has been made at a cost of $1,500, and two offices have been built in Newcomb Hall for administrative work.

The minimum entrance requirements have been raised from two units to twelve units, and this, of course, will serve to cut down the attendance, but the prospects for the coming year are most promising indeed.

WILL BE NEXT HEIR TO ANCIENT BARONETCY

Sir Reginald Pole-Carew Will Be Successor to Sir Edmund de la Pole.

BY LA MARQUESE DE PONTENROY.

THROUGH the death of Sir Edmund de la Pole, and the succession of his brother, Frederick, a confirmed bachelor in the neighborhood of seventy, General Sir Reginald Pole-Carew, whose name is pronounced "Pole-Carew," becomes next heir to the ancient Baronetcy of De la Pole of Shute, and to the Shute House estate, near Axminster, in Devonshire.

The general is celebrated as the best-looking man of his rank in the army, while his wife, Lady Beatrice Pole-Carew, eldest daughter of the Marquis of Ormonde, Comptroller of the Royal Household, is famous for her beauty, in addition to which she possesses by inheritance from her grand-uncle, Lord Lansdowne, an independent income of £10,000 a year, and a valuable place in Tipperary, known as Shanilly Castle. One of the general's sisters, Caroline, married some years ago an equally distinguished man, General William Loring, of Boston. Contrary to what has been stated, the family of De la Pole, while very ancient, has no connection with the De la Poles who in the Middle Ages were Dukes of Burgundy, who were closely allied to the Plantagenets, and who furnished a king to the church, in the person of Richard I., the Lionheart.

"Bloody" Mary's court, the wise and pacific counsels of whom were unfortunately overborne by those of Philip of Spain.

"Anthony" Sir Reginald's own place in Devonshire, which dates from the reign of Queen Elizabeth I., is the seat of the family, and is situated in the wooded heights of the tidal river Plym, which runs into Plymouth Sound. Among the treasures of the house is a glass case bearing the inscription, "Queen Elizabeth's Present to the Children of Richard Carew of Antony, 1580," and containing a number of silver toys, tiny cups, spoons, saucers, candlesticks, etc. Richard Carew was a Gudgeon of the Virgin Queen, and the portrait of herself which she presented to him hangs in the great dining-room. Anthony comes to the general through the female line, for Sir John Carew, his grandfather, left no sons, but only daughters, the eldest of whom, Jane Carew, inherited the estate and bequeathed it to her grandson, Reginald Pole, who, in turn, bequeathed it to his son, Anthony, who, in turn, bequeathed it to his son, Reginald, who, in turn, bequeathed it to his son, Reginald, who, in turn, bequeathed it to his son, Reginald, who, in turn, bequeathed it to his son, Reginald, who, in turn, bequeathed
